school operations. It is believed to be the first report in North America completing an analysis of both reactive nitrogen impacts and greenhouse gas emissions. The report is a result of a University of New Hampshire Sustainability Fellowship undertaken by UNH doctoral student Jackson Kaspari and hosted by the City of Dover.

Conducting a greenhouse gas (GHG) and nitrogen inventory serves a number of purposes, primarily by allowing a municipality to develop a baseline analysis to which future emissions and costs may be compared. Dover's report also provides a picture of how various city operations, facilities, and policies contribute individually to the gases and reactive nitrogen released into the atmosphere and surface waters. Identifying individual impacts then enables city leaders to target specific reductions to the overall municipal impact, such as retrofitting a facility with LED lighting, or transitioning vehicles in the fleet from diesel to gasoline, or from gasoline to electric.

Figure 22. A comparison of the old Dover High School's purchased electricity consumption with that of the new High School's with the implementation of solar.

In addition to aiding goal setting around existing structures and practices, the inventory provides theoretical reduction scenarios estimating the impact of possible actions such as installing solar arrays at city-owned properties like the closed Tolend Road landfill. The analysis also illustrated the significant impacts of a recent project, the retrofit of 1,781 streetlights with LED fixtures and smart controls, which resulted in a reduction in GHG emissions and cost savings that will quickly pay for the cost of the retrofit.

Calendar years 2016 and 2017 were chosen as a baseline for the analysis and to provide an example of changes from year to year. Overall, municipal and school operations generated 9,896 metric tons of carbon dioxide equivalent (MT of CO₂e) in 2016 and 9,560 MT of CO₂e in 2017, representing a 3.4 percent reduction from year to year. Reactive nitrogen released to the environment was 40 MT and 42.3 MT in 2016 and 2017, respectively, or a 5.4 percent increase.

This report comes as Dover completes its first two solar photovoltaic installations on municipally owned properties. The first, a 102-kilowatt (kW) array on the roof of the Dover Indoor Pool and Children's Museum of New Hampshire, celebrates a ribbon cutting this month. The second, a 912-kW array on the roof of the new Dover High School, will be online in the spring. UNH Fellow Kaspari calculated the impacts the systems should have in their first year. Together, the two systems are projected to produce 1,175,153 kilowatt hours of electricity per year and reduce GHG emissions by 106.9 MT of CO₂e, representing 1.1 percent of the city's overall annual carbon footprint.

The city's recent efforts to establish its footprints, implement efficiency improvements, and create renewable electricity generation also come at a time when communities around the state and nation are committing to 100 percent renewable energy goals. The most common goal is to transition a municipality to 100 percent renewable electricity by 2030 and its entire community to 100 percent renewable energy sources for all sectors by 2050. A few communities-Burlington, Vermont; Aspen, Colorado; and Rock Port, Missouri-have already achieved 100 percent renewable electricity sources. While Dover has not yet made such a commitment, a group of citizens approached the Dover Energy Commission last year to ask that it be considered.

"We are looking into a goal of 100 percent renewable, but we don't want to ask the City Council to set a goal without a plan to achieve it," says Energy Commission Chair Walter King. "This report now gives us an important and requisite tool in identifying approaches and challenges in achieving such a goal. Some communities in New Hampshire, like Concord, Hanover, and Keene, have committed, and we've also been in touch with them to understand how they are moving forward."

The carbon and nitrogen footprint baseline was compiled through the University of New Hampshire's Sustainability Indicator Management and Analysis Platform (SIMAP), in accordance with the global standards of the Greenhouse Gas Protocol. The inventory is organized into categories, or sectors, which represent the major sources of carbon and nitrogen emissions. The sectors analyzed by the city include stationary fuels, purchased electricity, the municipal fleet, employee commuting, employee travel, fertilizer and animals, school cafeteria food, solid waste, paper use, transmission and distribution losses, and wastewater treatment. In addition to analyzing the energy use and GHG impacts for each sector, the city's energy costs have also been calculated.

The report is available in the Planning and Community Development Department, the Dover Public Library, and online here. Those with further questions about the report may contact Assistant City Planner Elena Piekut at e.piekut@dover.nh.gov or 516-6008. For more information on SIMAP, see www.unhsimap.org.

Kaspari, the report's author and a 2018 graduate of UNH's Chemical Engineering program, as well as St. Thomas Aquinas High School, has continued his research by pursuing a PhD in Physical Chemistry at the University. His work focuses on how atmospheric aerosols affect the Earth's balance of energy received from sunlight and radiated back out of the atmosphere. Over the summer, he worked out of the Planning Department as one of 23 sustainability fellows pursuing challenging, multi-disciplinary projects based with organizations and communities throughout New England. For more information on the fellowship program, visit <https://sustainableunh.unh.edu/>.

Art installation aims to raise awareness of suicide's toll

A resolution before the City Council next week will allow an art installation at City Hall designed to raise awareness of the effects of suicide.

The art piece, titled "Missing", was created by local artist Amy Issa and, if approved by the City Council, will be displayed at Dover City Hall for 30 days outside the City Clerk's office. The installation consists of two four-foot by six-foot sections, painted in acrylic.

The Arts Commission approved the temporary installation in November.

In the resolution's background material, Issa describes her work as promoting "awareness of the effects of suicide. Not only representing the pain felt by those of us left behind, but also as an acknowledgement of the never-ending feeling of hopelessness suffered by those who either attempt or succeed in ending their lives through suicide. The simple, colorful silhouettes are used to represent the nameless, faceless people from all walks of life scarred by loss. The lasting tragic effects of losing someone to suicide are carried by the friends and loved ones left behind. Such a profound loss leaves an empty space in the hearts and souls of those living without their partner, son, daughter, mom, dad, friend... In some of the figures are holes meant to represent that space inside of us created by the loss of our loved one that can never be filled. The holes represent that piece of us they took with them when they left us behind."

The resolution before the City Council on Wednesday is sponsored by Mayor Karen Weston, City Councilor Matt Keane and City Councilor Dennis Shanahan. Shanahan services at the Council liaison to the Arts Commission. The resolution will appear on the City Council's Wednesday, Feb. 13, 2019 agenda. The meeting begins at 7 p.m. at City Hall.

The Dover Arts Commission was established to develop and promote programs, forums and exhibits that highlight the talent and active art related venues currently existing within the city.

New Dover Historical Society convenes Monday

Dover's original historical society disbanded in 2008 after 108 years in existence. Recently, a group of Dover citizens have determined that it should be revived. There will be a meeting of the new Dover Historical Society at the Dover Public Library on Monday, Feb. 11 at 7 p.m. Anyone interested in local history is urged to attend this organizational gathering to share ideas and concepts for reconstituting this essential group.

In just four years, Dover will be celebrating its 400th anniversary. Dover was the first permanent settlement in New Hampshire, in 1623, and is the seventh oldest community in the United States. Meeting organizers believe that a city with as much history as Dover needs to have an active and vital historical society to preserve and promote our four centuries of existence.

Please join us in reconstituting this significant organization.

For more information, call the Dover Public Library at 603-516-6050.

General Directions: From downtown, head west on Sixth Street, left onto Hillside Drive and follow the road down the hill to the end.

Feb. 8, 1699 - Experience Heard, alias Jenkins, who was scalped by the Indians July 26, 1696, recovered and lived to have one child, died on this day chiefly of her old wounds bleeding.

Feb. 12, 1800 - Capt. John Riley of Dover and the schooner Fanny, is captured by French privateer Hasard, of Puerto Rico. Hasard has Riley and two of his men sent to his ship, and then boards Riley's schooner. Hasard's men search the vessel and remove property valued at $400, before leaving Riley and his schooner.

Feb. 12, 1824 - Great freshet on the Cochecho, raising the water much higher than had been known for many years. The bridge on the main road to Boston (near Sawyer's) and near Ham's mills were carried away, but the Upper Bridge built by the Cochecho Manufacturing Co. and the Landing bridge, although severely shaken remained safe.

Feb. 12, 1825 - The trial of Amos Fernald of Gilford, for the murder of his five-year-old son, Alfred Fernald, which took place before the Superior Court in Dover, excited much interest. The prisoner was charged with keeping his child confined and literally starving him to death, and after a four days trial the jury returned a verdict of manslaughter. The number of spectators, their anxiety to hear the trial, and the want of room in the Court House, induced the Court to adjourn to the Meeting House, where the trial was held.

Feb. 12, 1844 - Died on this day, Captain William Flagg, aged 74. In early life he was an officer in the naval service of his country, for which at the time of his death he received a pension from the Government. He was afterwards an enterprising shipmaster, and long enjoyed the respect and confidence of his fellow citizens.

"Laugh Free and Live" with Saundra Maisey at Dover Library Feb. 19

On Tuesday, Feb. 19 at 7 p.m., the Friends of the Dover Public Library will present an entertaining program led by Saundra Maisey, a Certified Laughter Leader with the World Laughter Tour. This organization promotes a worldwide movement for health, happiness and peace by encouraging everyone to tap into the positive benefits of laughter and humor.

Studies have shown that children laugh over 300 times a day, while adults manage an average of just 15 times daily. What happened? How did we lose our ability to laugh? Can we find that laughter again-true mirthful laughter?

Absolutely, YES!

Saundra's program will help you find that inner laughter again. Attendees will partake in exercises that encourage playfulness and balance of mind, body and spirit. This may include gentle stretching and deep breathing, along with laughter exercises that combine laughing and physical movement. She will talk about the physical and psychological benefits of laughter then she will get the audience laughing to prove it. Give yourself permission to surrender your seriousness. This program is an invitation to breathe, laugh and play for your well-being. No experience required. You don't have to tell jokes or be funny or flexible to join us.

Saundra Maisey has been a Certified Laughter leader since August 2005. Upon completion of her training, she established "Granite State Giggles!" and leads laughter workshops for libraries, businesses, and other organizations. She makes laughter a daily activity in her life and is a catalyst for laughter with family and friends. Saundra is not a humorist or comedian; she merely loves to laugh, and to share the benefits of laughter with others. Prior to becoming a CLL, Saundra was a public school music teacher, retailer, and system design developer for a Fortune 500 company for over thirty years.

Everyone is invited to attend this free presentation and have an enjoyable evening with us.

Dover Police launch trading card program

Prizes available for collecting entire set

Chief William M. Breault of the Dover Police Department announces the release of the 2019 Dover Police Trading Cards, proudly sponsored by Wentworth-Douglass Hospital.

Each officer in the department voluntarily participated in the program and was issued 500 trading cards. The officers chose pictures of themselves that best represent their personality or interests. The back of the cards include information about the officer, words of advice, or a personal message.

Chief Breault would like the citizens of Dover to meet each officer in the department. Children are encouraged to ask officers for their trading cards when they see them in public or come to the Dover Police Department.

As an incentive to meet each officer and collect every trading card in the 2019 edition, the Dover Police worked with several local businesses that were happy to partner with the department. The first five children to collect 25 different trading cards will get a tour of the police department with an officer of their choosing and one of the following:

- Four free passes to the Children's Museum of New Hampshire
- $25 gift card to LaFesta
- $25 gift card to Tokens Taproom
- $20 gift card to the Noggin Factory
- $20 gift card to Dover Bowl

Once the child has collected 25 cards, please contact Officer Alex Mitrushi at a.mitrushi@dover.nh.gov or 603-

516-1319 to select from the above awards. Once one award has been claimed, the next child to collect 25 cards will choose from the remaining awards.

For more information, contact the Dover Police Department at 603-742-4646.
