DOVER CITY COUNCIL

ON THE AGENDA

Coming up at the next City Council meeting

Resolution urges peer review of EPA ruling that could cost Dover, region hundreds of millions of dollars

The City Council on Wednesday will consider a resolution that urges additional peer review of a draft nitrogen discharge permit recently issued by the Environmental Protection Agency for Great Bay. The Great Bay Total Nitrogen General Permit, or NPDES, will regulate nitrogen levels in the Great Bay watershed, including the levels of nitrogen discharged from wastewater treatment facilities. The cost of meeting those requirements would likely exceed $100 million in Dover alone, and could top $1 billion across all communities in the Great Bay watershed.

The City Council meeting will be held on Wednesday, Feb. 12, at 7 p.m. in Council Chambers at City Hall. The agenda can be viewed here: go.usa.gov/xdku5.

wastewater technology and infrastructure.

"The City of Dover recognizes that new and innovative regulatory efforts are integral to those continuing efforts," said Community Services Director John Storer. "However, Dover and the communities that comprise the Great Bay Municipal Coalition maintain the criteria used by the EPA in its draft permit is flawed and incomplete."

As a result, Wednesday's resolution before the City Council calls for a comprehensive and scientific peer review of the EPA's draft permit prior to issuing the final permit.

The NPDES permit allows the City's wastewater treatment plant to operate.

At a City Council workshop on Feb. 5, City Manager J. Michael Joyal, Jr. and Storer reviewed the draft permit with councilors and explained the potential ramifications to taxpayers and water and sewer system ratepayers. The presentation to the City Council can be viewed by clicking here.

Joyal said the new draft permit is a change in course from the previous draft permit, focusing now on nitrogen concentration levels for all 13 communities whose wastewater treatment facilities discharge into Great Bay. The new proposed levels and how they will be enforced have raised a number of concerns, including the cost to upgrade the wastewater and stormwater management systems to meet those requirements.

"We have a track record of reducing nitrogen that flows into Great Bay," Joyal said, adding that city staff and the City Council have made significant wastewater system improvements that help diminish the amount of nitrogen discharged into Great Bay. "That's the right thing to do for the health of Great Bay. Nevertheless, we have concerns that the levels being proposed in this permit are unnecessarily restrictive and, frankly, unattainable given the science as we know it today. There's a significant cost in even trying to achieve what would be required by the permit. We're talking on the scale of hundreds of millions of dollars."

Following a draft permit issued for Dover by the EPA in 2011, the city has been working with the EPA, the New Hampshire Department of Environmental Services, and other municipalities in the Great Bay estuary to seek options that are less costly and scientifically sound. The Great Bay Municipal Coalition conducted a peer review of the nitrogen criteria cited by the EPA and NHDES and found the data to be unfounded.

Despite concerns and data provided to the EPA and NHDES from the Great Bay municipalities, including Dover, the new draft permit calls for a reduction in nitrogen levels based on incomplete and outdated data.

According to the resolution before the City Council on Feb. 12, "the Draft General Permit's new 100 kg/ha/yr (kilograms per hectare, per year) nitrogen loading threshold represents a substantial reduction in nitrogen from communities in the Great Bay watershed. The 100 kg/ha/yr threshold is not the product of any scientific study specific to Great Bay. It is, in essence, a hypothesis drawn from scientific studies-some decades old-of other embayments. However, attempting to use non-tailored studies is against EPA's published Section 304(a) nutrient criteria, which states that 'most often each estuary must be addressed individually and the reference condition must be derived from data within that system.' The Draft General Permit is accompanied by a Fact Sheet that acknowledges Great Bay has historically experienced nitrogen loads well in excess of 100 kg/ha/yr historically, including during the pre-2005 time period, but eelgrass has remained stable except for a significant reduction in 2006-the year of the historic, 100-year flood commonly known as the Mother's Day flood in New Hampshire. Eelgrass recovery appears in more recent years, during which EPA's own Fact Sheet acknowledges ongoing nitrogen loads of approximately 150 kg/ha/yr."

The resolution's background information includes more recent assessments and data, as well as scientific analysis and review by experts from Tufts University and the UMass Coastal Program.

A public comment period pertaining to the draft permit is open until March 9, 2020. Comments must be submitted by the close of the comment period either in hard copy form or electronically to: Michael Cobb (Cobb.Michael@epa.gov), U.S. EPA, Region 1, 5 Post Office Square, Suite-100 (06-1), Boston, MA 02109-3912.

In addition, a public hearing on the draft permit will be held on Wednesday, Feb. 19, at 6 p.m. at the regional office of the New Hampshire Department of Environmental Services, located at NHDES Portsmouth Regional Office, located at Pease International Tradeport, 222 International Drive, Suite 175, Portsmouth, NH 03801.

The public is encouraged to attend.

- Plastic: Bottles, jars, jugs and tubs.
- Paper and Cardboard: Mixed paper, newspaper, magazines and boxes.

When we recycle properly, materials can get to their next best use, which helps protect the environment by conserving natural resources, saving energy and reducing greenhouse gas emissions. Placing items in recycling bins that are not recyclable such as Styrofoam, light bulbs, plastic flower pots and bags, contaminates the entire load and sends it to a landfill. It's important to know when an item is not recyclable and to place it in the trash. Follow these simple recycling guidelines:

1. Recycle all bottles, cans and paper.
2. Keep items clean and dry.
3. No plastic bags of any kind.

Not sure if an item is recyclable? When in doubt, visit <https://www.recyclesmartma.org/>. Enter the item name and click search.

Knowing what's "In the Bin" can help avoid contaminated loads of recycling, which are being rejected at processing centers and disposed as trash. These contaminated loads of recycling result in additional charges to the city.
